billion. That's a 78% decline in sales of permanent copies. Thus, a promotional benefit of $1 in 2000 is worth only 22-cents today. In contrast, since 2000, satellite radio has grown from zero to about 30 million subscribers, streaming services have grown from nothing to about 156 million users, and paid subscriptions have surged from zero to about 16 million.³⁹

This downward trend is continuing. From 2012 to 2015, sales of permanent copies have fallen by 41%. Even sales of digital downloads are trending downward, falling 21% from the peak in 2012 through 2015.⁴⁰

The data on sales in the Figure 1 present a clear story about the evolution of music consumption; a story of platform substitution. With the rise of cassette recordings, the sales of vinyl plummeted. A few years later, the sales of CDs rose and the sales of cassettes fell. Then, as the sales of digital downloads rose, accompanied by the digitization of music that led to piracy and increased file sharing, the sales of CDs began to decline. Now, both CD and download sales are falling as the revenue from digital streaming/satellite services are rising.⁴¹ People keep listening to music, but how they acquire it has changed dramatically. As explained by Mr.

⁴¹ As commentators have observed, the decline in CD usage has been so precipitous that many auto manufacturers are no longer installing CD players in their cars. D.
